THE SPARROWGRASS PAPERS;

OR, LIVING IN THE COUNTRY.

With Illustrations by Darley. Price $1.

Says The New York Evening Fore: "Mr. Frederick S. Correns, the author, by the publication of these papers, has at once arhieved a reputation as one of the liveliest of our young writer, and it is rare that a calebrity so sudden and so well merited, is accorded to any one."

Says The Home Journal, in an article comparing Irving, Dickens and Thackersy with the author: "We trust we may not seem to go beyond the record of this coderie of American and English authors, if we rank among them, thus early, the name of Frederick S. Correns, the author of the 'S-arrowgrass Papers." He possesses very many of the characteristics belonging to the above class of writers. There is in his productions, the same as in theirs, that living underflow of good nature and good sense which infuses a sweetness and loveliness into all his language. Then he is mirthful without being forcedly witry, observant without being pivey, tasteful without being headstong, instructional without being didactic, and, in fact, a model of that golden medium which in literature, as in all things else, is the same of perfection. The reader will glow under its humor, sadden under its pathoe, and turn the last leaf with regret; but he will be writer, happier and better, for having read the "Sparnowgrase has Rural Anticipations."

Notices of the Press:

"Jewels and pearls of native humor fall facilely from the pen of this merry writer. He even brings to light an assortment of fresh pune, which will rejoice the ears of many in the prevailing dearth of good things in that line."

"This book throughout spalles with gems of true humor. If a person feels dejected and care-with gems of true humor. If a person feels dejected and care-worn, a few pages of these remarkable adventures will shorten his countenance by one half."

"A lively, chatty work, overflowing with humor."

['The author has not only the propensity, but the talent to make fun out of everything. It may be profitably recommended to that numerous and forlors class known as dyspeptics."

"Full of wit and mirth—as welcome as one hour of smahine after a long storm. Full of amusement, genial and warm sentiments."

"The author plays on words as if he could not help it. Its humor is subdued and quier, but not less telling. Is much in advance of "The Stray Yankes in Teras."
